INTRODUCTION

This guide describes abstracting and indexing sources and bibliographies which represent a wide range of disciplines related to planning. Some are central to planning, while others deal with related, but more peripheral areas. It is designed to assist planning practitioners, educators and students in finding the appropriate sources for their research needs.

In order to use abstracts, indexes and bibliographies effectively, it is important to know their differences and limitations. Indexing and abstracting sources provide bibliographic information on all forms of published materials which enables the user to accurately identify and locate desired items. Citations are usually arranged by subject or author. Entries may appear under the author or subject headings alphabetically, numerically, chronologically or geographically. Some sources indicate additional features of the cited items—e.g., illustrations, maps, form, number of references, language or other features which help to identify the material more accurately.

Indexes do not include abstracts of cited material. Following are examples of citations from two different indexes:

From Social Sciences Index

Rural Planning

This article was cited under the subject heading "Rural Planning." It is entitled "The human ecology of rural land use planning" and was written by T. K. Rudel. The article contains a bibliography and map and can be found in volume 49 of the journal called Rural Sociology on pages 491-504 of the Winter, 1984 issue.
From Index to Current Urban Documents

Ogden, UT.

2147  SUT-0111

The above publication listed as entry number 2147 is entitled "Goods movement in the Salt Lake-Ogden urbanized area..." It was issued as Technical Memorandum No. 34 in Ogden, Utah by the Wasatch Front Regional Council in 1983. It contains 137 pages and includes appendices, bibliography, glossary, photos and tables. This publication is available on three microfiche from the publisher of the Index under order number SUT-0111. Ordering instructions appear in each issue.

In abstracting sources, citations are accompanied by a short summary usually consisting of a few sentences or paragraphs. Following is an example of a citation from Environment Abstracts:

02 Chemical & Biological Contamination

84-00764  Air quality planning in California: Where Do We Go From Here?, David Howekamp, et al. EPA, Western Oil & Gas Assn. Annual Meeting, Los Angeles, Dec 9, 82, p14 (10) conf paper

Air quality planning initiatives for California are surveyed. Strategies for attaining air quality standards established by EPA under the Clean Air Act of 1977 are discussed. Recently adopted schemes for the Southern California Basin are examined. Vehicular emissions control, particulate standards, and reductions in ambient aerosols and other pollutants are considered.

This conference paper is cited under the subject "Chemical and Biological Contamination." It is entitled "Air quality planning in California..." and was written by David Howekamp and others who are employed by the Environmental Protection Agency. The paper was presented at the annual meeting of the Western Oil and Gas Association Annual Meeting in Los Angeles on December 9, 1982. You can find this paper beginning on page 14 of the published proceedings and it is ten pages long. *84-00764 is the entry number in Environment Abstracts for this citation. The * indicates that it is available in microfiche from the publisher of Environment Abstracts or at a library which receives the microfiche.

Bibliographies tend to be limited in scope and published irregularly. They generally cite all types of published materials but deal with specific subjects and include only those items which the compiler considers suitable for inclusion. Some bibliographies are annotated. Following are examples of two citations from CPL Bibliography No. 146 "Towards new methodological realms in urban and regional planning," by M. W. Shennan, December, 1984.

John Forester's article called "Critical planning theory..." can be found in volume 31 on pages 1-25 of a series of working papers from the Department of City and Regional Planning of Cornell University. It was published in 1980.

The article by Lisa R. Peattie called "Politics, planning and categories..." can be found on pages 83-94 in the book entitled Planning theory in the 1980's. Robert Burchell and George Sternlieb edited the book which was published in 1978 by the Center for Urban Policy Research of Rutgers University.

Most or all of the sources covered in this guide can be found in college and university libraries. Some of the sources which deal with popular periodicals such as Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature, Education Index, Social Sciences Index and Business Periodicals Index may be available in larger libraries. Those who live in remote areas and do not have ready access to a library or lack the time for manual searching in the printed editions, can gain access to those titles which are available online through their home or office computers. Librarians and private brokers can perform the searches as well. Online accessibility is indicated for those sources which offer it.

Arrangement of the guide is alphabetical by the current titles; the necessary information is provided for those that have had title changes. A subject index follows this introduction for your convenience in locating sources dealing with specific areas that may interest you. A title index appears at the back. Location symbols are provided for users at the University of Wisconsin-Madison to indicate the libraries on campus where these sources can be found. A guide to the abbreviations follows the subject index.
